

Creating feats of clay at Community Kiln in Framingham

Posted February 24, 2017

Birdhouses, turtles, snakes and pizza form out of young imaginations during a February vacation class at Community Kiln, a ceramics studio located at SMOC headquarters at 46 Park Street in Framingham.

Isabelle Sharp, 11, of Natick adds glaze to her birdhouse during a February vacation class at Community Kiln, a ceramics studio located at SMOC headquarters at 46 Park Street in Framingham. [Daily News and Wicked Local Staff Photo/ Allan Jung]

Priya Garg, 9, of Framingham and her mother, Ruchir, work on the details of their clay birdhouse during a February vacation class at Community Kiln, a ceramics studio located at SMOC headquarters at 46 Park Street in Framingham. [Daily News and Wicked Local Staff Photo/ Allan Jung]

Instructor Cheska Kommisar listens as Sarah Sharp, 9, describes the mini ceramic pizza she's working on during a February vacation class at Community Kiln, a ceramics studio located at SMOC headquarters at 46 Park Street in Framingham. [Daily News and Wicked Local Staff Photo/ Allan Jung]

Program coordinator Nicole Dacey admires 8-year-old Oren Bly's snake on the beach as kids learn to make tiny sculptures during a February vacation class at Community Kiln, a ceramics studio located at SMOC headquarters at 46 Park Street in Framingham. [Daily News and Wicked Local Staff Photo/ Allan Jung]

Sarah Sharp, 9, of Natick paints her turtle during a February vacation class at Community Kiln, a ceramics studio located at SMOC headquarters at 46 Park Street in Framingham. [Daily News and Wicked Local Staff Photo/ Allan Jung]

